

New public hearing on injection well set

Ashley Lawrence
Staff Writer

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has scheduled a public hearing from 7-9 p.m. on June 29 at the Crowne Plaza in Romulus, seeking more public comment on the controversial injection wells owned by Environmental Disposal Systems (EDS).

The EPA has proposed to renew the underground injection control permits for the company.

The latest controversy stirred when Sunoco Oil filed a petition with the EPA asking them to reconsider an exemption issued to EDS in March.

The exemption freed EDS from federal restrictions on land disposal of hazardous waste for the two injection wells, which are located in Romulus.

Environmental Disposal Systems, a company that disposes of hazardous waste, would use the wells, which are about 4,200 feet below the surface, to hold hazardous liquid wastes-including acids and heavy metals like mercury, chromium and nickel.

Sunoco has received all the necessary permits from the state to begin to operate brine disposal and extraction wells in the same formation as EDS.

Sunoco plans to store natural gas for future use in the formation. When the gas is in demand, Sunoco would then bring up the gas and replace it with brine or salt water.

Officials are concerned that if EDS were also allowed use of the wells to dump the hazardous waste, Sunoco could bring the hazardous waste to the surface when it brought up the gas.

The EPA contends that, based on an extensive review of the EDS petition for exemption, scientific data and public comments, "the waste will stay confined to a layer of rock deep underground and will not threaten human health or the environment."

The original permits, issued in April 1998, expired in October 2003. They allow EDS to dispose of liquid hazardous and

Weighty matters

Romulus Mayor Alan R. Lambert and Gina Wilson of the Penn Enrichment Community Center in Romulus participated in the Romulus Get Healthy Get Moving health fair. More than 250 people "weighed in" on the matter. They will participate in the program throughout the summer, which includes a Get Moving Walk on June 19, a healthy eating seminar in July and the final weigh in at the Pumpkin Festival in September. The goal of the program is to promote a healthy lifestyle for Romulus residents and join with other communities who have adopted similar programs.

9 members named to advisory council

Romulus City Council members unanimously approved nine appointments to the recently reinstated Citizen's Advisory Council (CAC) at the May 25 meeting.

The new members include Julie Allison, Joshua Elwart, Travestine Marion, Angela Morris, Eva Webb, Annette Apsley, Susan Hunt, Randy Moffat and Sharon Walker.

The CAC will serve as an advisory committee to the Romulus Downtown Development Authority (DDA), but it has not been in existence for a number of years, according to Tim Keyes, economic development director for the city.

Keyes said that because the current DDA plan is being revised, there is a stipulation that if more than 100 citizens live in the district a CAC is mandatory, but more importantly the DDA wants the input of the residents who reside in the district.

"The intent of the council is to complement the DDA, which is made up of downtown business owners," said Keyes. "Now with the CAC in place, the residents will also have a say in what is happening in their neighborhood."

Mayor Alan Lambert said he is thrilled to see the CAC back in existence.

"It is their (residents') downtown. They should have a large say in what goes on down there," said Lambert. "It's the people's city. I am just the mayor."

The decision to amend the current DDA plan is designed to keep it current with what is happening in the downtown area, said Keyes.

"We are talking about improvements to the downtown area, including public art and new sidewalks," he said. "Plans can grow old and we are just ensuring that the Romulus DDA plan stays current to accommodate the things we are looking into doing in the district."

Keyes said the CAC will be a vital part of the planning process for the downtown area. The committee members will be included in any decisions made and their recommendations will be taken into account by both the DDA, as well as city council, said Keyes.

Candidate looks to improve school district

Leo Knasiak Jr., an 18-year resident of Romulus, said he is seeking a seat on the Romulus school board to get the district back on the right track.

"It is time we make some changes in this community," said Knasiak. "We put people into offices simply because they have lived here their whole lives. It is time to look beyond this community."

Knasiak has a bachelor's degree in business management with a minor in accounting and finance. He served as an internal control auditor at the Ford Motor Co. general offices for 31 years. He also served as an officer in the military during the Vietnam War.

He said he believes his background in finance and management would be an asset to the school board, because it enables him to better find and eliminate unneeded expenses that would save the district money to be used in other areas.

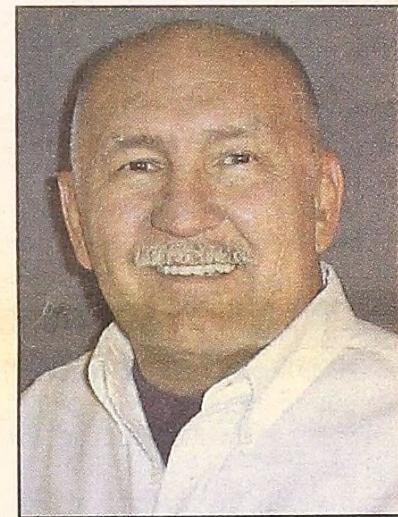

"I can read a balance sheet," he said. "I have prepared and worked with budgets over the years. I will be able to look at something and figure out whose interests will be met."

Knasiak said he believes that not enough school board members go against the wishes of the superintendent, even if it would be the best thing for the schools.

He said that many of the current school board members are "yes" people, who will say yes to anything that comes before them. Knasiak said he does not see himself as a "yes" person.

"I will not say yes because someone tells me to," he said. "I will say yes if it is the right thing for the district and the students and the teachers."

Knasiak said he believes that a widening of the current curriculum is a definite must during the next four years.

Leo Knasiak Jr.

"We have to begin to lean more towards a vocational education in our schools," he said. "We have to give the kids who won't be going to college a trade to be able to support themselves after they graduate from high school."

Knasiak made it clear that he believes a college education is a must for any young person starting out in today's world.

Knasiak said he sees the financial issue as the most important going into this election, because he said taxpayers' money is not being correctly spent.

"Residents need to get their school tax dollars reduced in this district," he said. "The money cannot simply be given to the board for them to do with it what they wish."

He also said the funds that are received by the school board need to be better utilized to the advantage of the district.

The only good thing Knasiak could think of regarding the Romulus schools was the freedom the district gives teachers.

He said that the teachers are given a lot of opportunity to operate their classrooms with more freedom than other school districts.

Motorcyclists bring message of Christianity

John Counts

Don't let the long hair, tattoos, and leather jackets throw you off. The new biker gang in town is riding for a higher calling.

Like other motorcycle clubs, they have a name, the Forgiven Warriors, and colors they wear proudly on their leathers. But instead of boozing and fighting that people often associate with the biker lifestyle, this group is more interested in worshiping and praying.

These bikers are modern-day missionaries on hogs and choppers, bringing a religious message to the masses with a growl of the throttle and a haze of exhaust.

The Christian Motorcyclists Association (CMA) has recently opened a new chapter covering communities in western Wayne County, Washtenaw County, and southern Oakland County. The chapter, started last October, has grown from 13 to 63 members in less than a year.

And they're still looking to grow, said chapter president Gary Pogue. He said he wants this particular chapter to be family-oriented.

"Our hope as a CMA chapter is to put on events that are geared towards the whole family," he said.

Recently, the association gathered in the parking lot of Tri-City Christian Center in Wayne for the Blessing of the Bikes event. Any motorcyclist interested can attend and have their bike blessed. But there was also food, prizes, and games for children.

Pogue envisions events like these, but much bigger. Along with 13 other CMA members, he formed the new chapter last fall. He's been riding for two years, he said. His yellow trike, a modified motorcycle with three wheels instead of two, has earned him the nickname "Big Bird," though his height, about 6-foot, 2-inches, and shoulder-length blond hair probably helped him get the moniker.

Raised as a Catholic, Pogue said that for much of his life, he "didn't go to church at all."

He said a divorce and a number of other events in his life brought him to the church, first to Northridge in Plymouth, where his long hair and affection for leather jackets made members think he was a biker. Someone told him about CMA so he went to a spaghetti dinner sponsored by the group.

"The rest snowballed from there," he said.

He joined a downriver chapter of CMA, but soon wanted something closer to his Canton Township home.

Todd Bates, road captain for the Forgiven Warriors, said he came to the church, and eventually CMA, after a motorcycle crash. He's been riding for 25 years, but about six years ago, a duffel bag got tangled up in his wheels while he was going 70 mph on the freeway. He said he escaped with only a broken finger.

"I figured there was a reason," he said.

An international organization,

Forgiven Warriors Patti Draper, Todd Bates, and Barry Draper attended the recent Blessing of the Bikes at the Tri-City Christian Center.

CMA began in the mid-1970s and now has received more than 90,000 applications and has chartered 700 local chapters. It's an interdenominational ministry on wheels of sorts. But they aren't trying to overwhelm anyone with their beliefs, Pogue said.

"We don't go to people and thump them with Bibles," he said.

The organization as a whole raised about $2.5 million in 2003, Pogue said. According to Pogue, some of the money was sent to countries like Belize and Mexico to outfit local ministers with Bibles and motorcycles so they could get out to hard to reach areas and spread the gospel.

On a local level, CMA chapters sponsor events and have various teams that go out and do different things in the community.

Each year, they have the Ride for the Son. Chapters in each state convene on the state capitol and have a prayer vigil.

Each chapter also has about nine teams that go out into the community to help. The patch on the back of a member's leather indicates team membership.

"We can do a lot of things in the community with the teams," he said.

Some of the teams include hospitality, music, prayer, and mechanical.

Pogue said that the patch, which reads Christian Motorcyclists Association, Riding for the Son, gets a strange response from people.

"It's amazing to see the change that occurs in people," he said.

Underneath the lettering and symbols, Pogue's patch says prison, which means he goes to correctional facilities with other team members to speak with inmates. Because of their biker appearance, inmates will listen to CMA members, Pogue said.

"They feel we're on their level," he said.

Overall, though, Pogue said the organization is all about helping others.

"It's a matter of going places and helping people," he said. "What it comes down to is sharing life experience."

Forty-three Metro Academy students will become the first eighth grade class to graduate from the charter school this week.

Academy graduates first class

Andrea King
Staff Writer

The first eighth-grade class will graduate from Metro Academy in Romulus this week, just four years after the charter school opened.

"We are so proud of how far we have come in such a short period of time," said Brigitte Brown, assistant principal at Metro Academy. "This is only the beginning."

The school, located on Ecorse Road, opened in 2000 for grades kindergarten through fifth grade. Each year the school has added one grade allowing it to slowly grow, said Brown.

Metro is part of National Heritage Academies, a charter school system that started in 1995 in an effort to create schools based on what parents most want for their children, said Brown.

"Our foundation lies in our four pillars," said Brown. "These four key areas are what attract parents to our schools."

The four pillars consist of accountability, moral focus, back-to-basics teaching and parent involvement.

The accountability falls on the school system, said Brown.

"If we are teaching our students that must be accountable for their actions," she said. "Then we must also be accountable."

Brown said that the moral focus pillar is one that is taken very seriously by teachers, students and parents.

Each month the students are given a word to focus on for that month. Words like wisdom, perseverance, respect and integrity have been used throughout the months to illustrate the importance of these traits to the students.

"The students really take the words to heart," said Brown. "One month the word was compassion and four girls decided to cut their hair and donate it to the Locks of Love organization to show their compassion. It really makes a difference in their lives."

Brown said the school also believes that a back-to-basics approach to teaching is fundamental to the success of Metro Academy. She explained that back to basics means going back to the way schools used to teach students.

"We do a lot of preparatory work with the kids, getting them ready to enter high school," she said. "We want them to be prepared for what they will encounter when they leave Metro."

Finally, Brown said that the most important aspect of the four pillars is the parental involvement. The majority of parents are involved in their children's school life, said Brown, a fact that she believes sets Metro Academy apart from other schools.

"We rely on our parents here," said Brown. "They are an integral piece of schools."

Metro Academy has 609 students from more than 39 different zip codes in the Metro Detroit area, another reason parental involvement is so important, said Brown.

"We don't have a busing system, so our parents are responsible for getting their children to and from school," she said. "Some parents come all the way from Monroe and the east side of Detroit to bring their kids to school each day. That is dedication."

This Friday, 43 eighth grade students will become the first graduating class of Metro Academy. Some students will be moving on to other charter schools for high school, while others will attend private or public schools.

"Our students will succeed because we have given them a great foundation and raised the level of academic expectations for them during their time here," said Brown.

Romulus schools received their 2003-2004 Michigan Educational Assessment Program (MEAP) scores last week, but Tom Dolan, director of curriculum for the Romulus schools said he isn't putting much stock in them.

"Yes, we definitely improved our scores in some areas," said Dolan. "But we do not judge our students or our teachers simply by what one test given on one day tells us."

This theory has proven the Romulus schools well, according to Dolan.

He said the district is more inclined to look at the improvements they can see in the classroom to show their progress, not the MEAP scores.

At the elementary level, the schools made a large improvement in the reading/language arts and math section of the MEAP.

This year in reading/language arts, district elementary schools scored a 63, which is the state average, compared to score of 45 last year.

The elementary schools also made an improvement in the math section of the MEAP.

This year the district scored a 74, compared to a score of 56 last year. Due to the leap in the score, the district is actually above average in the state.

"We have made some strong gains," said Dolan. "And we are very proud of that, but it just isn't the most important thing to us as a district."

It wasn't all good news, however.

In the social studies and science portions of the MEAP test scores were down this year.

The social studies score came in at 19, compared to 24 last year and the science score for 2004 was 68, compared to 75 from 2003.

The Romulus Middle School also saw improvements in their MEAP scores this year.

In math the middle school received a score of 50, a 12-point increase from last year and in science the school received a 47, a three-point increase over last year.

Council OK's increases in city building fees

Ashley Lawrence
Staff Writer

In an effort to enhance the current revenues in Romulus, city council members approved the increase of building department fees at the May 25 meeting.

"This is long overdue," said Councilman William Wadsworth in response to the proposed rate hike.

The increase will mark a 124 percent hike across the board in fees, according to city officials. The largest increase will be seen in the city certification inspections fee. Currently for a residential home the rate for inspection is $55. The rate will increase to $125 beginning July 1.

"These fees haven't been changed in a number of years," said Mayor Alan Lambert. "And in these economic times we had to tighten up our belt."

Lambert said it was also important for the city to get paid the correct amount for the work they are doing.

City officials said the increased fees are comparable to those found in surrounding communities.

The building department fees have not been increased since their adoption more than 17 years ago.

Democratic club garage sale set this weekend

Ashley Lawrence
Staff Writer

The rains came last weekend and washed out many events planned in Romulus. One of the events, the Romulus Democratic Club (RDC) garage sale has now been rescheduled.

Club members all hope for better weather this weekend, when the event returns to the Romulus City Hall parking lot from 8 a.m.-8 p.m. June 5 and 6 for the garage sale.

"Don't throw old items away," said Jack Trumbull, president of the RDC. "Donate them to a good cause."

The garage sale will benefit the Friends of the Animal Shelter fund.

"Fifty percent of the proceeds are going to go to raise money for the new animal shelter," said Trumbull. "We feel that it is something that is important to the community and we wanted to help."

Trumbull said donated items will be sold throughout both days and can be dropped off at anytime.

If items need to be picked up, call Trumbull at (734) 323-9397 or Dave Tyra at (734) 710-9933.

non-hazardous waste into the two wells. The average daily volume of waste injected is estimated to be more than 240,000 gallons and the maximum pressure allowed would be 765 pounds per square inch.

New conditions or not, Mayor Alan Lambert said he is determined to stop EDS from pumping anything into Romulus soil.

"My feeling is that we don't need this well," said Lambert. "There are other ways to dispose of hazardous waste. Romulus has been used as a dumping ground for so many years. That needs to stop now."

Lambert said he urges residents to attend the public hearing June 29 and voice their opinions about the well.

Draft permits and other documents related to the EDS wells are available for review at the Romulus Public Library, 11121 Wayne Road.

State test scores are good news for Romulus school district

Residents receive help during water contamination crisis

Adrea King
Staff Writer

When thirsty residents of Belleville were in need of water, Channel 7 went into action.

Bill Spencer from Channel 7 news, along with Costco food services and Van Buren Public Schools, distributed free drinking water last Wednesday at Belleville High School to area residents during the township drinking water warning.

Paul Henning, communication specialist for Van Buren Public Schools, said that Costco heard about the boil water alert and wanted to help. Spencer contacted the school district as well, extending a helping hand.

The school followed with space to distribute more than 60,000 bottles of water within 2 hours to people lined up all the way down through Main Street.

Community volunteers included: Toni Hunt, Keith Johnson, Robert Binert, members of the Belleville Band Boosters, 34th District Judge Brian Oakley, the National Honor Society and the Belleville Athletic Department.

"This is a wonderful community service that Channel 7 and Costco provided," said director of personnel Louise Williamson.

"I am proud of our high school students and community members for volunteering. It was gratifying to see the students, staff and community members pull together with such a short notice to provide this unique service to the community."

Van Buren Township announced a drop in the water pressure on Tuesday, which may have led to contamination. Residents were advised to use bottled water or boil all water before drinking, making ice, washing dishes, preparing food, or using for brushing teeth.

Officials lifted the water warning Wednesday morning after getting water pressure restored and testing samples from around the system.

Pete Lazaroff, superintendent of schools, commended the plan.

"It's the kind of commitment that pulls the community together in a positive way," he said.

It's the right move

It's hard to imagine a municipality that wouldn't benefit from a study similar to the one commissioned this week by the Northville Downtown Development Authority (DDA).

Undertaken by the Gibbs Planning Group, the study will provide a complete local and regional inventory of shopping centers and retailers, study tenant mix and land use along with factors like pedestrian and vehicular traffic patterns and give recommendations about the future marketing and development of the city. It will look at the city master plan, proposed new developments as well as existing potential development sites and formulate economic growth models as they relate to business trends.

In short, it will give officials in the city a snapshot of where they are, where they've been and where they're going.

It would be easy for officials in Northville to forgo the study. They commissioned a similar one about seven years ago, and development has since been good. It's not as though they have to kick and scrape to attract new businesses; store fronts are rarely vacant there for long.

It's important, though, for any community to occasionally look to outside sources to get a different perspective, if for nothing else to show them that they are on the right track. It doesn't matter how successful they are.

At a time when communities throughout the state are looking at revamping their image, updating their look and bringing in new businesses, Northville may already be ahead of the game. The best way to stay head is to stay informed and the best way to do that, sometimes, is to seek outside advice.

It's a good example to follow.

Better luck next time for Cool City grant program

Gov. Jennifer Granholm was scheduled to unveil the recipients of the Cool Cities catalyst grant program Wednesday morning and, as of Tuesday night, it didn't look good for the City of Wayne.

Officials in the City were informed Tuesday that they weren't one of the 20 recipients of the grant funding in the pilot program.

Well, it was a nice try, anyway.

Officials in the city can still learn a valuable lesson from the attempt to secure the grants, which were handed out to cities that took part in the Cool Cities Initiative last year.

First and foremost is that you can be as prepared as you can possibly think you need to be, and still be rejected.

The plan they submitted for the grant, to fund the construction of the clock tower plaza at the corner of Wayne Road and Michigan Avenue, was a good one. It contained all of the elements that officials from the city thought the state looked for: concise, complete designs, a partnership between public, private and corporate funding sources — the clock tower was donated by the Wayne Garden Club and the project funded in part by developer Stuart Michaelson. They could even justify that it met the overriding criteria of the grant: to serve as a catalyst for future downtown development.

It's a safe bet that many of the 120 or so other communities that applied for the grant weren't as well prepared as the city was to pounce on the opportunity. Who knows, maybe even some of the recipients weren't.

The positive thing about being denied this grant, if there is a positive, is that there is no real loser here. The project is still a good project, and it will still take place. It had in fact already been budgeted so it's patriotic to use those occasions to campaign!

At last, their number is up

Close to the Edge
by Scott Spielman

There were a variety of reactions last month when Terri Lynn Land, Michigan secretary of state, announced the closure of several branch offices, including the one on Michigan Avenue in Wayne.

The idea behind it was to combine the older, inefficient offices into larger, more up-to-date regional ones, but officials here in Wayne lamented the proposed closure, because they said it would be a reduction in services to Wayne residents.

I disagree.

I mean, what service?

Here's an example. I was in there recently to renew my registration. It wasn't my first visit there: I had driven by on previous occasions, taken a peep in the door and left, discouraged at the length of the lines.

This time was different, though. There were only five people sitting on the uncomfortable plastic chairs, spread out on the dingy carpet.

That's not too bad, I thought. I pulled my number: 97. They were serving 91. I glanced at the clock: 3:15 p.m.

About 15 minutes later, number 91 was still showing on the electronic counter, and still, apparently, at the counter. There were three employees back there, one of them talked on and on and on (and had been since I walked in) about the title or registration on a Chevy Tracker. One of them was nearly out of sight, behind a pillar, helping the person I assumed to be lucky contestant number 91. Another employee was helping people out who had returned to the 'returns only' line.

Then old number 91 left, as did the other customers at the counter. Here's where we would pick things up, I thought. All of the sudden, they would call three numbers and then I would be almost next.

Not so.

A couple of minutes went by, and the counter stayed at 91. Nobody approached the counter, and nobody behind the counter seemed interested in calling anyone up. I waited another minute or so before I tossed away my once-promising number 97 and sped down the road into Canton Township, where employees dispatched a line of about 10 people in as many minutes.

This is the kind of service we want to preserve?

I don't think so.

Granted, having a secretary of state office in the community can be a good thing. It's an often-used service that can draw people into the town, people that can then frequent shops and restaurants. But we shouldn't go out of our way to keep a place like that in operation. We should be pointing out that the location could be a good one, with its easy access, central location and plentiful parking.

We should be demanding the respect that an investment into the office — new lights, new furniture, new computers and more employees — should bring. There's no sense in arguing, hoping to keep the status quo when nobody wants the status quo. We want improvements, not a caricature of bad service in a dingy location.

I say let it go, clean it out, open the door for something new, something better.

It wouldn't take much.

Improve yourself with curiosity your health before it's long gone!

Ernie Harwell, "the voice of the Detroit Tigers" for more than four decades, retired after 55 years behind a major league microphone.

Today, at age 86, Ernie's days are filled with serving as a health and fitness advocate for Blue Cross Blue Shield of Michigan, public appearances, writing, traveling and taking long walks with "Miss Lulu," his wife of more than 60 years.

His latest book, a collection of his baseball columns entitled "Life After Baseball," is available at local bookstores or by calling 1-800-245-5082.

I've always believed that one of the best things a person can do, from a mental perspective, is to develop a curious mind about life.

One of my favorite hobbies is asking people about their families, where they grew up, their jobs, whatever. I joke that I'm the biggest busybody around, but the truth is that I like finding out about people, what experiences have shaped them, what makes them tick. It's great fun and a wonderful way to learn and build relationships with people.

There are other things we can do, too, to exercise our minds. Next time you come across a word you don't know, instead of skimming by it, find a dictionary and learn about it. What does it mean? How did it originate? How is it used? It might just stick in your head for the next time you're searching for that perfect word or phrase.

Traveling is another great way to expand your horizons and see how other people live. Our country is so beautiful and diverse, and full of learning opportunities. I also highly recommend traveling abroad, if you're able, because it can really give you a new perspective on the world and life.

When we cultivate our minds, we improve ourselves and become more well-rounded.

And that's a healthy way to be.

And remember, take care of Coincidence or intervention?

Some people will not believe the following story; others will connect with it immediately. What's most important though, is that you understand this is absolute truth. It happened recently to a friend of mine.

The deal was done, or so she thought. After eight months of looking for the right position to practice her skills as a medical doctor, the golden opportunity had arrived in Kentucky.

The Michigan house had been sold, another in Kentucky bought. For Dr. Kate, life was looking great, and she was ready for a break on a road that had been rocky.

"I'd already gotten past applying for the Kentucky medical license because it said have you ever used drugs, or been in treatment for alcohol, or abused either one in the past 5 years?

"So, I truthfully said no, and I figured that was kind of the end of it as far as answering those kind of questions."

The employment contract from her new boss arrived, and Dr. Kate's life took a dive.

"One sentence stood out bigger than hell: 'Dr. Kate asserts that she has no history of alcohol abuse, drug abuse or mental illness that she had not disclosed prior to this contract'"

The boom had been lowered.

You see, Dr. Kate is a recovering alcoholic and drug addict. Clean and sober for the past seven years she'd worked harder on recovery, than for her medical license.

"I thought, oh, s---, I'm gonna lie, you know, it just brought back all my old addict thinking. We (she and her husband) talked it over and decided that probably the best thing to do was to lie."

Dr. Kate was about to be reminded, that in recovery, you can't be a little bit bad.

"My conscience was beating the hell out of me for a week, and finally I went to a (support group) meeting. I didn't tell the story. I just listened. Everybody talked about honesty and integrity and I thought, OK, God, I'm listening."

"I said to my husband afterward that I really didn't feel comfortable about this (lying). He said, give him a call. So, we called the new boss who listened a few minutes and said, 'You know, I don't think that should be any problem for us.'"

Dr. Kate had just spent one week of sleepless nights and constant worry about "what if?"

Oh, the story gets better.

She went to another meeting, this time to tell her story. Unbeknownst to Dr. Kate, the out-of-town guest speaker for state AA convention that night was also there. And, in a room where 80-90 people were scattered around a dozen tables, this fellow sat down at Dr. Kate's table.

"I told my story," Dr. Kate said. "And, it turns out the stranger is the director of the impaired physician program for the State of Kentucky." Laughing now, she added, "Ahhh, duh."

"He said he's sees a lot of miracles around the program (Alcoholics Anonymous) but this is close to being the burning bush."

That's it. That's the story. So, divine intervention or coincidence?

Me? I don't believe in coincidence, but have indeed experienced divine intervention, just like my friend Dr. Kate.

And, you?

try to take advantage of an opportunity to leverage additional money from the State of Michigan. It won't be the last attempt, and it probably won't be the last rejection, either.

What matters is that the group itself does not lose its momentum. The ideas they've put forth in their four short months of getting together have been good ones. It shows they are concerned; it shows they want to make an impact, and it shows that they're willing to put forth the effort to make things happen.

Eventually things will fall into place and the city will get the attention it deserves, the spark it needs to bring about an even brighter future.

It may even save a few trees, because the ones along that stretch of roadway would have had to have been removed.

All in all it was a good attempt on the part of the city to show they are poised to take advantage of future opportunities.

And there will be future opportunities, to be sure.

It won't be the last time the city is eligible for funding under this or other programs. It won't be the last time that the Wayne 2020 Committee will

THE SCENE

DAY AFTER TOMORROW misses on message

Just when you thought it was safe to start polluting the Earth again, 20th Century Fox had to unleash a new wave of disaster movie, The Day After Tomorrow—a special-effects laden homage to all previously made end-of-the-world movies—to persuade you otherwise.

In The Day After Tomorrow, man has exhausted the natural resources of Earth and Mother Nature strikes back with a vengeance, causing an abrupt climate change with catastrophic consequences—mainly the deep-freezing of the entire northern hemisphere.

That's the message Fox and director Roland Emmerich (Independence Day) would like to imbed in the minds of moviegoers. Pollution is bad and if we're not careful we will end up fleeing south by the thousands and all end up immigrants in Mexico. My, how the tides will have turned if that happens.

While it's an important message, I don't think making a $100 million-plus movie is the way to broadcast that message.

At the center of the story is Professor Adrian Hall (Dennis Quaid), a paleoclimatologist (a scientist who studies the weather patterns changed in the past), who discovers the early warning signs of the impending doom.

However, the cocky American vice president disregards Hall's hypothesis and no measures are taken to save lives...until it's too late.

While Hall attempts to save the world from the effects of global warming, he must also make his way to his son Sam (Jake Gyllenhaal). The problem is: Sam is in New York City as a part of scholastic competition when the flooding and chilling of the new Ice Age overwhelms the city. So, as the rest of America escapes to the south, Hall heads north into the eye of the storm to save his son.

A disaster movie wouldn't be the same without a young budding romance between characters, as cliché as it may seem. In Tomorrow, the only reason Sam is participating on the scholastic decathlon team—and the only reason he is in New York—is for a girl, Laura (Emmy Rossum). However, the only things their romance offers moviegoers are hokey lines and goofy smiles—something audiences couldn't help but laugh at—while devastation is falling around them.

The special effects are amazing. Viewers will see Los Angeles torn to shreds by tornadoes, New Delhi blanketed by snow, and Tokyo pummeled by hail the size of grapefruit and a slew of hurricanes, earthquakes, tidal waves and tsunamis. The Atlantic Ocean also rises to the height of the Statue of Liberty's armpits, flooding New York City, and then freezes over.

There are obvious tense moments throughout the film but spectacular special effects don't mean anything if there is no story, dialogue or acting to back it up.

After seeing the movie I'm no more afraid of the end of civilization than I was before except that I have started looking into real estate prices in Mexico. Tomorrow has only reinforced my fear that moviemakers' indulgence in special effects will be the end of well-written, acted and directed films as we know them.

After seeing the movie I'm no more afraid of the end of civilization than I was before except that I have started looking into real estate prices in Mexico.

New York's Fifth Avenue is about to become a memory.

Sugar-coated 'Raising Helen' falls flat

Ashley Lawrence
Staff Writer

Move over Meg Ryan. Kate Hudson is on her way to take over the title of "America's Sweetheart".

The only problem is Hudson may actually be too cute for the title. It may sound odd, but Ryan adds a sense of practicality to her characters. Audiences feel as though she is someone who could be their next-door neighbor. But Hudson seems too perfect. She is so sweet that she must smell of bubble gum and banana splits 24/7.

In her latest romantic comedy, Raising Helen, Hudson stars as Helen Harris, a woman who is living the life she has always dreamed of as an assistant at a top Manhattan modeling agency.

Dominique (Helen Mirren), her boss, is your typical, everything-is-about-me-woman who has Helen constantly on the go. But this is no problem for the unattached Helen, who spends her days at fashion shows and her nights in the hottest clubs in the city.

All is good until her life is turned upside down when she receives a phone call informing her that her sister and brother-in-law have been killed in a car accident, leaving behind three children.

Now, all is not yet lost for Helen's perfect lifestyle, because she assumes that her older sister, Jenny (Joan Cusack) will be awarded custody of the children, adding to her own two and a half child household (one is on the way). Jenny is the average Pottery Barn soccer mom who is always on the ball and ready to solve any problems that may arise.

But, the family is shocked when the will reveals that Helen has been named the children's legal guardian.

This is where the Garry Marshall movie begins to walk a familiar and nauseating line. It is not hard to guess what will happen next. Helen must now make serious decisions for her new family, but again the sugary, vanilla syrup just seems to drip off the screen. And there is very little mention or concern for the emotional state of the three children who seem to be having a grand ol' time with Aunt Helen just days and weeks after they lost both parents.

This film lacks any concept of reality. It is like the Walgreen's commercials about a place called "Perfect" and how perfect life would be if we all lived in Perfect. Raising Helen should be the film showing at the Perfect Cinemas on Main Street in Perfect.

Helen uproots the kids and moves them from their home in New Jersey to a middle class neighborhood in Queens, while she attempts to keep up her lifestyle, but it begins to fall apart fast.

Fear not. It would not be a romantic comedy without a love interest for Helen to give her support through this transitional time and to down the road serve as the father figure for her nieces and nephew.

Enter Pastor Dan Parker, played by John Corbett who achieved fame in his recurring role as Aidan on the HBO series

Sex and the City and previously as the radio DJ heartthrob on Northern Exposure. Parker is the single principal of the children's new school in Queens and quickly begins to fall for the struggling Helen.

Pastor Dan made me feel like I had taken the entire candy selection at the concession stand and brought it into the theatre.

Sugar, sugar, sugar. Maybe it is just that there are too many of these movies out there. Once in a while, a nice cute romantic comedy is good for everyone to see, but this was overly sentimental in all the wrong places and never once produced any laughs.

So much for the romance and comedy portions of the romantic comedy Raising Helen.

Way too much sugar, not enough romance and the comedy was seriously underdone.

Stevenson Spartans upset Northville Mustangs, 1-0

Jeff Novak
Staff Writer

Finally, the rivalry between the Stevenson Spartans and the Northville Mustangs soccer teams was settled. In three previous meetings in the last two years no player on either team had scored. That's three 80-minute games with 240 total minutes of scoreless action.

However, in the Western Lakes Activities Association (WLAA) league championship game last Wednesday night, that all changed.

After another 38:50 of shutout soccer, Stevenson's Lia Williamson broke the scoreless streak in the first half to give the Spartans their first lead against the Mustangs in two years. The rest of the game belonged to Stevenson's goalkeeper, Mindy Magoullick. She made six saves to shut out Northville in the championship game.

"It was a well-called and evenly-played game," said Northville Coach Ron Meteyer. "It's a chess game anytime we play them – you have to find a weakness."

The Mustangs lost, but it wasn't

The Northville Mustangs fell short against the Livonia Stevenson Spartans, 1-0, in the Western Lakes Activities Association League Championship last Wednesday.

from a lack of trying.

Northville out-shot the Spartans, 6-5, and had some quality chances throughout the game, but nothing would go in the net. Freshman forward Danielle Toney had some good shots, Meteyer said, but it was junior midfielder Jennifer Kritch that almost netted one for the Mustangs. She split two defenders in front of the Stevenson goal to take a shot from four yards out. But, the surprised goalie was able to make the quick stop, according to Meteyer.

Sophomore goalie Katie Weicksel also had an excellent night in net for Northville, Meteyer said. She stopped five shots to keep the game close. She also came out of net to stop two breakaway chances by the Spartans. However, the Championship game depended on Northville's offense.

"We switched things up a little bit to give them a different look," Meteyer said. "It went pretty well."

Inkster coach helps break local color barrier

Jeff Novak
Staff Writer

While some Americans were trying to beat down racial barriers with riots and protests in the 1960s, Inkster resident Al Rice was busting through racial walls with a baseball bat.

In 1970, Rice threw all caution to the wind and formed the first mixed black and white baseball team in Inkster.

"I got a wild idea one day," Rice said. "I knew there was no black and white teams in Inkster and I had a friend in Garden City named Al Gergan. I called him up and said 'I've got a real good idea. Pick up a six-pack and meet me at the house.'

"I told him 'I want to put a black and white team together' and he spit beer all over the place. He told me it wasn't going to work."

with hopes to prove everyone wrong.

"I told Al to bring me the kids off of his side of Michigan Avenue and I'll get the ones on my side," he said. "He left shaking his head. We got together and got a team together. I told them what I wanted and those kids played beautifully together. No problems at all."

The Astros made it to the Connie Mack Championship game in their first year and won 1-0, according to Rice. He still remembers the game like it was yesterday.

"I had a runner on first, Tony Dicker-son. He had good speed and one of the other fellows got a hit up the middle and scored Tony in from first base to home to score the only run of the game.

"Jim Kubiak pitched the game, a white boy," he continued. "I was going to take him out but he begged me to leave him in. Jim won that game and the Connie Mack League that year, 1-0."

From there, every team that Rice had coached won a championship.

"It went on with every team that I had—championship, championship, championship," he said. "I won so many championships I didn't want it anymore. I used to have my fellows bat left-handed to try and keep from scoring, but we would still win."

Rice naturally made his start as a player. At the age of 10 or 11, when he was living in Kansas City, he would take his glove with him on the way to Sunday School and sneak in a game beforehand. He played catcher – and was a dirty one at that – he said.

"I'd put the ball where you were coming home," he said. "I put that ball in your groin, put it in your face, put it in your neck, put it in your throat. I got all cut up sliding in on them, too," he added, lifting his pants leg to show off old brown scars on his shin and leg.

When his father died, he was 18-years-old and he enlisted in the Air Force, because there was no one else to challenge him, he said.

After his training in San Antonio, TX, he was sent to Selfridge Air National Guard base near Mt. Clemens. And when he finished out his term in the armed forces at age 23 he started playing ball again.

He tried out for a softball team in Ypsilanti that didn't have a coach.

"Nobody knew anything about coaching," he said. "I just walked in and tried out. I made the team plus I started coaching the team."

With 12 minutes left in the game and Northville down, 1-0, Meteyer brought three forwards up to help get the offense get going – to no avail.

"Bringing three forwards up took away from the midfield and caused problems in our transition game," he said.

The Mustangs will have to put the loss behind them and prepare for their district match up at 6:00 p.m. tonight in Northville. They drew a bye in the first round and are scheduled to take on the winner of Tuesday night game against Walled Lake Central and Walled Lake Western. The game was played Tuesday night, but the result was not known at press time.

On the other side of the bracket, Novi took on Redford Union and Livonia Stevenson faced off against Farmington Hills Mercy on Tuesday night. The results of the two games were also unknown at press time. The winners will battle it out at 4:00 p.m. today at Northville.

The district Championship game is scheduled at 7:00 p.m. on Friday, June 4 in Northville.

Rockets blast Zebras fall to Chargers

Jeff Novak
Staff Writer

The Rockets softball squad was blanked, 3-0, by the Churchill Chargers last Thursday afternoon.

Once the Chargers started bunting it was all over for the Rockets.

"We were playing the bunt correctly to start," said Glenn Coach Bill Duncan. "But one of them got away from the player and they were able to score."

The Chargers scored two runs in the third inning an RBI-single knocked in the third run in the fourth to put the game away.

Dana Baran pitched a five-hitter with four strikeouts and four walks in the loss.

On offense, the Rockets struck out seven times but managed some powerful hits. However, nobody crossed the plate. Devon Ross had a base hit in the third and Rebecca Oros nailed a shot up the middle for a single. Amanda Fullerton also hit a single in the seventh, but nobody could bring her home.

The game ended as a 3-0 victory for the Chargers.

Rockets 12, Zebras 2

John Glenn had better success against cross-town rivals the Wayne Zebras on Tuesday, May 25. They had home field advantage and blasted the Zebras, 12-2, in a five-inning mercy.

Baran pitched a three-hitter with eight strikeouts to record the win.

On offense, the Rockets blasted 11 hits for 12 runs. Fullerton had two RBIs on the day. Ross and Megan Dean each had a RBI-single. Oros was a powerhouse with three hits, including two singles and a double, to knock in six runs. Bridget Berg had a single with two RBI and Amy Bailey had three hits and scored twice.

"We hit the ball real well," Duncan said. "That's been our strength all year. For as hard as we work at it we should be hitting the ball well. Other than that it was a nice cross-town game."

The Rockets headed to Garden City for the first round of the district tournament on Tuesday but the results were not available at press time for this edition. Glenn did match up against the Cougars earlier in the season but lost to them, 2-0, according to Duncan.

We were playing the bunt correctly to start. But one of them got away from the player and they were able to score.

Coach Bill Duncan

Romulus High School senior Carla Broom recently signed a letter of intent to play for Henry Ford Community College (HFCC). Also pictured are her mother Beth and HFCC coach Ed Ruhl. Broom, who will be attending the college on an academic scholarship, was also the number one player on the girls' tennis team for the past two years and a three-year starter on the Lady Eagle Volleyball team. Broom was also an all-league selection in both sports.

NOTICE OF A PUBLIC HEARING UNSPECIFIED USE DETERMINATION/SPECIAL LAND USE MID ROMULUS (MICHIGAN DOWNS)

Pursuant to Michigan Public Act 207 of 1921, as amended (The City and Village Zoning Act), notice is hereby given that the City of Romulus will hold a public hearing at 7:00 p.m. on Wednesday, June 16, 2004, for the purpose of considering a Use Authorization question under the Zoning Ordinance and Map. The public hearing will be held at the Romulus City Hall Council Chambers, 11111 Wayne, Romulus MI 48174-1485.

The Planning Commission has set the public hearing to consider a request from MID Romulus (Michigan Downs) for a 212 acre horse racing/entertainment facility and research and development facility to be considered as a Special Land Use within the RC, Regional Center District. Baseball it work, and it worked. It worked, it worked."

Once the Astros were formed and they started winning there was little dissension among the players and the parents.

"The kids were undecided about what they wanted to do," he said. "The parents were undecided if they wanted their kids to play like that. But, after they saw what I was putting down and we started winning, they all fell right in with it."

"Ever since then you have seen black and white kids playing together," he added. "It really helped the community. It really helped bring them together."

He said that he has had about 27 teams and every one of them won championships.

"It makes me feel good," he said. "It makes me feel like I've done something."

Rice has also coached softball, football, basketball, soccer and volleyball and has won championships with every sport that he has coached. And when Rice isn't coaching, he's umpiring. And when he's not 'umpming' he's cooking. Rice cooked for 38 years of his life and takes time to teach kids to cook.

"I'll always work with kids," he said. "Be it coaching, umpming or cooking, I'll work with them. I'll work with the worst kids and I can straighten them out. That's my thing."

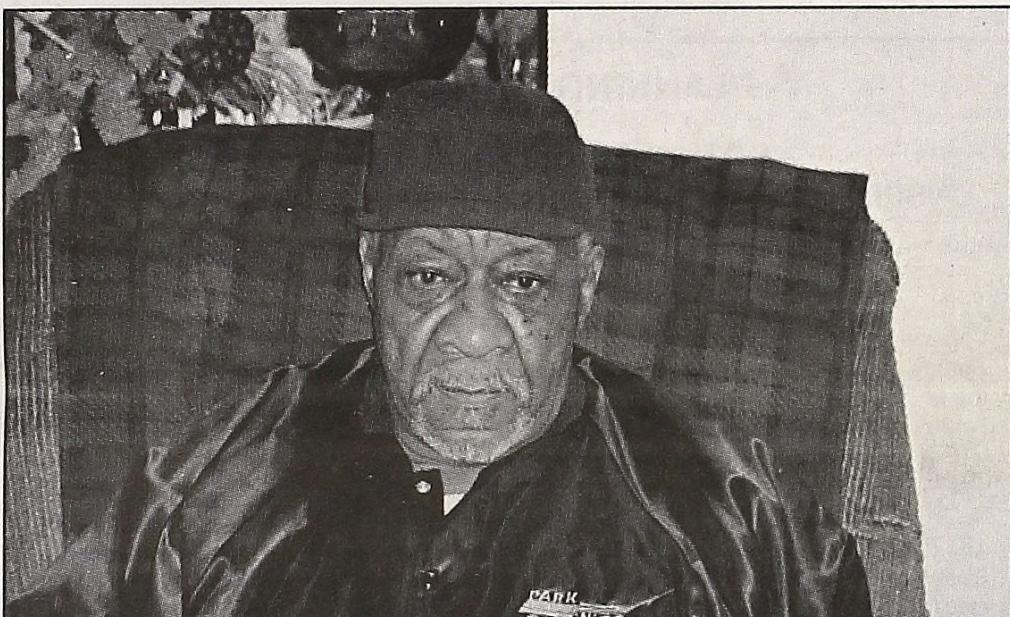

Rice is a guy used to winning and rising above all odds but he suffered his biggest loss last April when his wife Juanita died.

"She was always right there by my side," he said. "If I got into an argument she would be in the argument too. She was my transporter. She would drive the kids back and forth to the field every game. I just thank the lord for a wife that understood."

On top of everything he does, the 70-year-old Rice also plays drums and sings for his church. However, he has had to slow down this past year because he underwent open-heart surgery in April.

But that won't keep him down though. He even said he's thinking of playing for an over-50 league this summer.

"I just love baseball," he said. "That's my heart; I guess I'll do it until I die. God willing I will be on that field next year doing something—either coaching or umpming."

Al Rice, who is recovering from recent open-heart surgery, swears he will be back on the field either coaching or umpming.
